REPORT REINFORCES NEED FOR JOBS AND TRANSPORT

The recently released Rising Cost of Living report highlights the need for improved transport services and amenity in the rapidly growing north metropolitan corridor.

The report, commissioned by the Committee for Perth, suggested that urban sprawl is fuelling congestion in the Perth metropolitan area.

It outlines a plan to discourage multiple vehicle ownership and increase the density of inner City suburbs, which are closer to existing transport links.

However City of Wanneroo Mayor Tracey Roberts has argued that the report instead highlights the need to decentralise governance and commerce to key business centres outside the city.

"The Perth CBD will always be the central business hub of Western Australia, however centralising jobs and limiting people's choice of living and employment to a central area is not viable," said Mayor Roberts.

"The metropolitan area is growing at an unprecedented rate, with 7,800 new families moving into the City of Wanneroo each year.

"By broadening the diversity of the greater Perth metropolitan area and creating employment opportunities within the rapidly growing business and residential districts outside of Perth, congestion, as well as the cost of living, will be eased."

Mayor Roberts is calling for the Government of Western Australia to recognise that the future of Perth lies not just within the CBD, but also within key economic nodes within the greater metropolitan area.

Investment in improving existing transport, by extending the freeway and railway lines, as well as improving other transport options is necessary to lessen the burden on Perth's roads and reduce the cost of living.

The City of Wanneroo calls on the Government to take action, understand the growth and look to an improved future for the entire metropolitan community.
